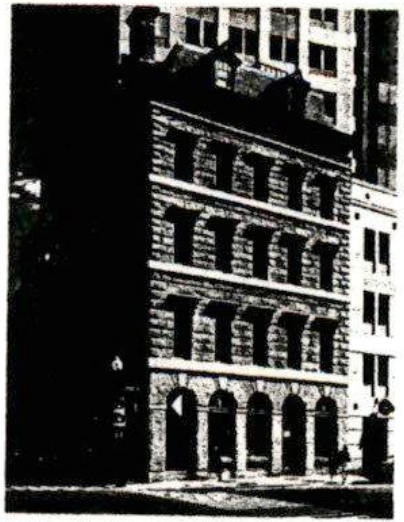
Reference: ARCHITECTURE (Nov. 1991) p. 98



One of the few granite stone mercantile/warehouse buildings to survive the Boston fire of 1873, this 1853 landmark structure was renovated by architect Dennis C. Rieske as the new headquarters for the Boston Society of Architects (above). Purchased at a foreclosure sale, the structure required extensive rehabilitation for which the Boston Landmarks Commission set the standard. The BLC regulated the reconstruction of the mansard roof and gutter system, window replacement, shop front elevations, masonry cleaning techniques, and the paint scheme.

"The 1887 Allston Depot dates from the Boston & Albany's fourteen -year building campaign (1881-1894) which established a signature corporate identity along the length of its rail corridor.... the B&A erected thirty-two Richamson Romanesque stations on its main line and astride its picturesque suburban loop known as the Newton Circuit. Consistent with the corporate aesthetic initially established by project architect Henry Hobson Richardson and continued by his successor firm Shepley, Rutan and Coolidge, the Allston Depot is characterized by its rustic stone construction, vast expanse of slate-tiled roof and simple ground -hugging form" BRC: F73.8 A474 B67 1997x
